

Pilgrims filled the streets of Jerusalem for Passover. As Jesus entered the city, he attracted a curious crowd. Many wondered if this miracle worker, who taught with such authority, might actually be the long awaited Messiah. They were full of excitement and anticipation that he would lift Rome's hand of oppression, so heavy upon them. Those who enjoyed seats of power feared he would disturb Caesar enough to wreck their authority. Crowds don't always see clearly. What did he want them to see? At issue today, what do you see in Jesus?

1. What do those who are closet to you see in you?
2. How would you chart your interest in Jesus?
3. Who do you know that is showing signs of being interested in discovering more about Jesus? In what ways have they displayed their interest in him?
4. What does Jesus have to say about himself that peaks or sustains your interest?
5. What did Jesus want for the Greeks who were seeking him? How does his response translate in your relationships to people?
6. It is rightfully said that Jesus is the primary source for those who have God questions. How have you seen this hold true in conversations with those who are seeking?
